JUST WHAT WAS SAID

Excerpt from the Convocation speech, Oct. 30th given at Kensington Campus by C. C. Litga, George Brown College's President.

The times in which we live are without doubt the most exciting and the most challenging yet to be found in the course of human history. There have only been two major social-economic revolutions in the 50,000 year history of civilization. The first revolution came with the invention of agriculture after man had lived for about 45,000 years. This resulted in the development of specialization of labour in community living and the development of towns and villages. Then next came 5,000 years later with the invention of powered machinery and the beginning of the development of the technological age. The first revolution took thousands of years to accomplish; the second two or three hundred years. The one which is just starting will take only a few decades. This revolution has to do with the quality of life on a global basis rather than a family or even a national basis. It was to do with the solution of the problems that give rise to war, to local famine, to the destruction of the environment, and so on. The technologies we have at our disposal are adequate to the solution of world problems but we who have the necessary knowledge have yet to learn to apply it. The challenge of the next thirty years is a social challenge in which technology must be brought to the service of mankind. Marshall McLuhan has graphically depicted our technological achievements in describing the world as a Global Village. We have instant communcation with all parts of the world in both sight and sound. New developments in social and financial administration are immediately available to all. World travel, and Canadians travel more than any other people, reduced prices and improved living standards. We have the same relationship of access to people elsewhere in the world as early man had to his village neighbour. The challenge in McLuhan's concept of the Global Village is to develop neighbourliness and a concern for the solution of village problems. In prehistoric times the solution of village problems was a matter of survival. Man is just as true today in our villages. Don't disparage skills and knowledge in any field, our sciences, technologies and knowledge of human behaviour all are desperately needed in the service of man.

Until fifty years or so ago the young and adventurous went off to explore new frontiers and perhaps to make their fortune. Few if any geographic frontiers remain to be explored. Instead the frontier is to be found on the periphery and at the interfaces of existing social orders. The challenge to those who would explore is greater than ever before. The opportunity for greatness surpasses anything achieved by our ancestors.

On Remembrance Day (Thursday, November 11), morning classes will end around 10:30, and students are encouraged to attend the City Hall Remembrance Services. Afternoon classes will begin around 12:30 by which time everyone should have had lunch—actual time to be determined by each department. Evening classes will run as usual.

B.S. SEPARATION & CONTRACEPTIVES

By the year 2000 you'll be filling up your tank at the service station with gasoline made from animal wastes.

The project to convert animal wastes and even garbage into oil and gasoline has been underway for several years by scientists at the U.S. Bureau of Mine Research centre here.

Two tons of manure can be turned into a ton of crude oil.

And each year farm animals in the U.S. produce about two billion tons of manure, about eight times the amount of garbage tossed out each year.

By the time the year is over the U.S. will have used up 900 million barrels of fuel oils, an increase of 10 per cent over the 1965 consumption of 600 million barrels.

The demand for fuels is greatly on the increase and cows will be needed to replace oil wells before long.

A Bureau spokesman said: "when the oil is depleted from the ground, oil firms will turn to waste, maybe in the year 2000."

In a brief to the Federal Government, the Black Arts of Canada Committee says the CBC is "grossly neglecting blacks as citizens and taxpayers."

The committee says a separate program department should be set up to serve the cultural needs of blacks in Canada.

Black taxpayers are treated "with an insensitivity and disregard and a racial entitlement to contempt," says the committee.

The CBC reflects an all-white cultural image of Canada when the taxpaying population is not completely white, says the brief.

The brief, sent to St. State Secretary Gerard Pelletier and CBC president George Davidson, asks for an immediate meeting to discuss the proposed new program department.

The Black Arts Committee, a group of artists, students, community workers and professionals, is affiliated with the National Black Coalition, an association of more than 40 different black organizations across Canada.

A Swiss company announced recently that it has perfected a new contraceptive, the first to be used by either man or woman.

Called C-Film or His and Hers, it consists of a thin piece of film of about two square inches which dissolves during intercourse releasing a spermicide.

Produced by the Lagan Co. of Lugano, it has received Swiss Government approval and will go on sale in other European countries soon.

Morning after pills are being dispensed through the student health clinic of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute. The pills have had excellent success.

OUR MOTHER OF PARLIAMENT

It seems the Amchitka first demonstrated again that there are such things as differences of opinion. As much as we may oppose and protest to Richard Nixon and his advisors they were not simply opposed to our point of view but must have been for our point of view of their own.

In Canada nothing of recent date has caused such a measure of unanimity of opinion. Not just vocal youth but one got the feeling large segments of the so-called silent majority were in sympathy with the protest. Economic nationalism, which perhaps has greater direct impact on us, divides us but on Amchitka the war general agreement in our point of view. The closest thing to a Canadian expression in some time.

YCDBSOYA

YCDBSOYA was encrusted on cufflinks given to members of a Canadian Trade Mission, organized by the Minister of Trade and Commerce George Hees, and designed to help secure new business for Canadian products in foreign markets.

The subject of participatory democracy frequently comes up—it is alleged to be the desired new look for George Brown College. The "elite pyramid"—several avenue trips to the top—is supposed to replace the pyramid—"master of all his surveys". Of course you can have a mixed system with some opting for the former while others tenaciously cling to the latter.

Confuse the situation further with a chronic budgetary crisis and the resultant deterioration in job security plus the relatively unhealthy climate of the outside. All of which can add up to a muddying of the waters and slowing of progress. It has been said that it may take ten years before George Brown College will emerge into the sun.

Political problem remains that people have concentrated upon thinking in terms of lines of authority. Though how one can really see an improvement in replacing one avenue for securing permission from several beats me.

Which reminds me of a story I heard the other day. It was about the new president of a long-established company making a tour of the various company locations. At one such place he was engaged in conversation with a supervisor who pointed out that he had a better way of proceeding with a particular operation than the long established method used by the company. In fact the supervisor demonstrated how the company's procedure had wasted a great deal of money whereas his method would actually save money.

The president showed considerable interest in the supervisor's suggestion and, as he turned to leave, he said: "I'm not able to say whether you are right or wrong, but, from what you say, it sounds as if your method is worth a try." Then the president thought for a moment: "In fact, if you really believe your method to be superior, and you don't put it into practice, consider yourself fired."

And if you haven't discovered what YCDBSOYA stands for, know you can always get up off your ass and find out.

BACK TO THE WAILING WALL

Faculty have resolved the third weekend payroll drought by voting for pay checks every other week instead of twice a month. With the exception of Solomon, it has already been discovered that it may now be difficult to meet those monthly savings for Canada Savings Bonds.

THE OTHER PLACE

MUSINGS

notes from a fall
diary II

Hloyd c. bowen

I'm convinced that noisemakers are conspiring to keep us (you and me, the saner ones) from thinking to even enjoying life.

I get more and more convinced of this when I go into the fourth floor cafeteria (Teraulay). "They" have a jukebox in there now. And the Noise at 9:30 in the morning is ungodly. Not to mention unbearable.

I suppose there must be noise. People are lonely. They feel that without the radio blaring, the television going things are far too quiet.

I remember going into the Edison Hotel one summer night with some friends for a cold one. There was a night club there and we got a table quite close up to the stage. It was Rock or Country music or something at different stages of the evening and it was ear-splitting.

Those under twenty-five don't seem to mind. I took note of them at Brownings, or at the Riverboat where they sit numb, rigid, hypnotised as it were. I reason that they've blocked out the sound. Perhaps, perhaps, they're sitting there under a cloud, in a stupor, hearing nothing; not even the noise.

As Dr. Lam (Toronto Sun) informs us: Noise deafness is common to people who (most) work around loud noises... People who have been exposed to too much noise will show loss of hearing when tested with an audiogram. Interestingly enough, the noise deafness makes it impossible for a person to hear the finer aspects of music such as the high frequency tones.

Is this the sort of thing that they (the noise-makers) want to impose on us (you and me, the saner ones)?

We should eat our heavy meals during the mornings at 6, 7 or 8 o'clock.

Wally Crouter of CFRB was talking about that one morning last week and it set me to thinking.

If we did so, then we could work it off during the day. Even the sit-downers could at least work off its effects by 5 p.m.

I'm for this reversal process: heavy meal in the morning; light meal at night. I'm sure the effect would be quite remarkable in an increasingly sedentary society.

The clown, the jester, the fool, the comic, the funny man, the humorist and all such, have you ever wondered about them?

Henry VIII I noticed—in the recent play: the Six wives of Henry VIII—had a court jester to make him laugh when he had the blues.

So too did Shakespeare introduce clowns, jesters, fools, etc., in his plays. Jacques in As You Like It is a memorable and down-likable character.

They're all part of society. They're there to entertain us; to cause us to forget ourselves for a while and let our hair down.

The other day I was looking at Flip Wilson and listening to him talk about Ralph the invisible wonder dog. And then I wondered: suppose you or I were to do the same thing at street corners, what would happen to us? Would the crowds laugh? Would we be certified insane?

Society is funny. It would flip—and laugh too—for doing what he is doing to/about Ralph his invisible wonder dog but would penalise you or me if we were to do the same thing.

Maybe we need a license. Or perhaps society needs its head read.

MEDIA TODAY

"The Canadian Press is dull, not even good enough to be bad or sensational," offered Arnold Amber, editor of the Toronto Citizen, as panel member of "The Press and Where it's At," presented by the Media Club at the St. Lawrence Centre Tuesday evening.

Both he and Don Cameron editor of the Mysterious East, attacked the "established press" condemning the publishers for trying to advertise rather than defend and consumers and exerting excessive control over the journalist. Cameron condemned the demise of the Telegram suggesting it was ridiculous a city the size of Toronto could support only one evening paper. He further pointed out Canada produces good journalists but they are

Say! Have you seen our drivers lately? They look quite sharp in their new uniforms.

Talking about uniforms there's someone wearing one I'm sticking my eye around. Called Gingers during the evenings. Apparently the neighbourhood kids played hockey and football in the parking lot at nights and, to save the teacher's cars, the gate to the lot has been locked.

To get their cars out the teachers must contact this agent of the security company we have hired.

By the way, being an old military man myself, I think he might be interested in his rank.

Those who have seen him may have noticed two "pips" or stars on each shoulder. This suggests that he is a major.

Now, that was the easy part! Depending upon whether he is following the U.S. or British pronunciation of the word you can call him "lou" tenant or "lef" tenant respectively.

Confidentially, the "loo" is correct but the Canadian forces follows, diligently, the British way of saying "lef" tenant.

Sorry, I've not shown up in the last two weeks. Terribly busy, you know! I am now going to have a free weekend until after Christmas. I won't even get to see the Santa Claus Parade! issues

One free weekend I might have had was Dec. 4th. But I'm too crazy! I'm not going to complain about THAT weekend.

If the weather holds (keep your fingers crossed) and some electric al equipment finally gets delivered, the Beach Campus will have lights for the truckdriving course at nights.

They wanted them last winter but didn't get them then. It's a long story about "why didn't they tell us during the summer?" -- so I won't bother telling it; but the bad weather is back and we are down at the beach freezing our ears and hands.

WHAT A DANCE!

I was certainly delighted to participate in the "Autumn Dance" held at Kensington. Faculty and staff really could themselves on Fri. Nov. 5.

At one point I thought that only a few people were going to arrive and, like many student dances, we would have had one colossal flop on our hands; however, only minutes later we were not enough chairs to go around. I was glad I had some hockey experience because the crowd on the floor handed out "accidental" body checks ever so often.

The DJ was a compliment to the chef at Kensington and the audio-visual department there put on such a display I had trouble trying to see everything (I also had trouble with the name that night). I could be a little "sticky" about the ad stating the "wet bar" would not dry out -- the darn thing closed for about half an hour. Isn't it funny how, when you want a drink and you cannot get one, the craving for it increases.

I ran into Vince Drake and the two of us were going into the dance. Our esteemed Athletic Director almost drafted me for the job of the team's goal-keeper at practices. He recalled my humble efforts two years ago when I was a student. I played in goal on defence and made one mad rush as a forward but brought fame to the team by writing my "Benchmark" Reports for the GLOBE.

Vince, I love hockey but I'm not too crazy about getting in goal again!

destroyed by the system citing several instances of Canadian trained journalists doing well elsewhere.

Borden Spears of the Toronto Star was the chief target of the attack from these gentlemen. He also had to field a great number of strong, bitter questions from the audience concerning the Star's role in the folding of the Telegram and their failure to hire the Tely's popular Ron Haggart.

RIGHT, PERHAPS

Popular writers on memory improvement tell their readers that there is no such thing as a bad memory, that it is all a matter of training. Such statements cannot be considered correct; they are inspired by the desire to encourage those who lack confidence, who wrongly assume that they "have a poor memory."

It is the individual who is not interested in his fellow men who has the greatest difficulties in life and provides the greatest injury to others. It is from among such individuals that all the failures spring.

Become genuinely interested in other people.

Smile. Remember that a man's name is to him the sweetest and most important sound in any language.

Pay close attention. Encourage others to talk about themselves.

Talk in terms of the other man's interest.

Make the other person feel important—and do it sincerely.

The Boston Transcript once printed this bit of significant doggerel:

"Here lies the body of William Jay,
Who always maintained his right of way—"

He was right, dead right, as he sped along,

But he's just as dead as if he were wrong."

SEEING WITHOUT OBSERVING

Seeing without observing is like eating without tasting. The person who goes through life without tasting what he sees may as well make the trip with his eyes shut. My wife goes to an artist who really knows and observes what he sees. His sense of observation must be keen indeed when he can put on canvas or paper the beauty of a smile, the pain and agony of a child, the fierceness and fury of a storm. When you said good morning to Mrs Sedore today did you notice she was sweeping the verandah in her bare feet? Maybe you were too busy complaining about the weather to notice that your English teacher gave you. When you got on the bus and you stared at that sexy blonde did you notice she had only one ear-ring? She had only one earring? You didn't notice that the friendly bus driver had shaved off his mustache. Have you stopped to ask yourself what colour your bedroom ceiling is or what colour your girl's eyes are? I believe that an artist in a three month could paint a portrait of Fred from memory without his mustache. By observing and tasting the little things you can really taste, see and know what life is all about. What did you observe today?

And he didn't. He stayed single until he was thirty-five years old, then he proposed to a rich widow, a widow fifteen years his senior; a widow whose hair was white with the passing of fifty years of Love? Oh no. She knew he didn't love her. She knew he was marrying her for her money! So she made just one request; she asked him to wait a year to give her the opportunity to study his character. And at the end of that time, she married him.

Since the support staff favour the bi-weekly system (367 in favour: 11 opposed) such a system should be implemented.

The target-date for implementation is January 1, 1971. During the ensuing months, the Payroll Supervisor will meet with the C.S.A.P. Executive (Supervisory Staff) and the Faculty Council to discuss details of implementation.

It is not anticipated that the implementation procedure will result in any inconvenience to staff.

PUPILS LEARN BETTER IN SMALLER CLASSES

The opinion of many Canadian educators that smaller school classes mean higher educational quality has been supported by a U.S. study.

Results of the study by the Institute of Administrative Research at New York's Columbia University, were presented to the advisory committee of the Toronto Board of Education yesterday by the board's research director, E.N. Wright.

From detailed classroom observations across the United States, the research found that the smaller the class, the higher it scored on a scale to determine quality of education.

Small groups, laboratory work, individual work and discussions scored higher than lectures, movies and question-and-answer periods.

Schools that spend more freely have proportionately higher quality of education than those that do not, the researches found.

The findings were introduced during the committees discussion of pupil-teacher ratios, for which it relates the total number of students to the number of teachers as a means of allocating provincial education funds.

Wright said the study was the only reliable one available in Canada or the United States and described it as a breakthrough.

SANTA CLAUS PARADE

Each year, Eaton's reminds us that it is time again to do Christmas shopping by having jolly old St. Nick arrive at their Queen St. store.

clips

Moslem students here as well as all Moslem nations will be celebrating the more important of the two Moslem festivals from November 19 to 21, 1971.

Festivals mark the end of RAMADAN, the fasting month by the Arabic or lunar year. For 30 days, Moslems have fasted from sunrise to sunset to feel thirst and hunger as the poor do.

Also, RAMADAN serves to purify our bodies and minds, bring us closer to the true meaning of life as was passed down from ALLAH (GOD) to mankind during the month of RAMADAN.

This Saturday, Nov. 13, thousands of Toronto area residents will wade through Yonge St.'s curbsideous by awaiting Eaton's 67th annual Santa Claus Parade. At 8:30 Santa and all the array of spectacular floats, costumed and beautiful girls will leave Yonge and Dovercourt. They will make their way along Davyport Rd. and arrive at Yonge Street at about 9am. Crowds of kids with half frozen toes and fingers and big eyes will gaze at cheer as this year's 25 floats and 1,000 people pass. A multi-colored end rotating star will lead the procession. A float in past years, Mother Goose will be included; Bedknob and Broom sticks and Sylvester and Tweety Pie have their own floats, too.

After a six mile walk, the parade will reach the Queen Street store at 10 am.

Watch for the history of the Santa Claus Parade in next week's Globe.
